Sisal Plantation Proposed On Lands at Heeia, Oahu

W. H. Pain and H. W. S. Edmunds have issued a prospectus of the Hawaiian Sisal Co., Ltd., to be organized for the development of a sisal plantation on the lands of the Heeia Agricultural Company at Heeia on this island. The company has over 12,000 acres at its disposal under favorable lease and in fee simple. Conditions of the location are highly advantageous for producing first class fibre. Under the leases all the houses at Heeia and Kamehameha pass to the control of the new company and a good portion of the land is very well fenced, thus obviating large initial expense on this score.

Arrangements have been made for the importation of young plants required for seed and by buying in large quantities very favorable terms can be made. There is already growing on the land a good number of thrifty sisal plants, the leaves from which have been tested with the best results. The coconut oil bean is also being produced on the lands at a profitable figure. During the first year it is proposed to plant 2,120 acres in sisal and besides this the cultivation of hemp, ramie, jute and abutilon fiber will be undertaken. The water supply from rainfall and water courses is conservatively estimated at eight million gallons a day, which is quite sufficient for all purposes.

The management is to be in the hands of H. W. S. Edmunds, who undertakes to produce fiber at a cost that will give a good profit should the selling price fall as low as three cents a pound. The present selling price in San Francisco is 9 cents a pound. Edmunds has had extensive experience in the tropical and semi-tropical countries, especially in Mexico.

It is estimated that a profit of at least 20 to 100 per cent on the capital expended during the first four years can be safely reckoned upon in the case of the first crop, which is obtained, as we have above stated, at end of three years or three and a half years after planting, according as "bulbils" (pois plants), or plants of older growth, are planted, and that a profit of at least 70 to 200 per cent on the annual capital expenditure can be reckoned upon each year afterwards, during the life of the plantation.

And it is confidently expected that the income in the meantime before the first crop of sisal is obtained, from the cultivation of jute and hemp and ramie and abutilon fiber and other fibers, and from the cultivation of manioc, tobacco, pineapples, castor oil beans, and other quick-growing crops, will amount to at least $50 to $100 per acre per crop, giving a net profit of at least $10 to $30 per acre per crop.

Extensive tables are given in the prospectus which deal with the items of expense in most minute detail, estimating the selling price at the lowest figures and expenses at the highest. This shows a certain and well sustained profit on the investment.

Referring to the small farming features the prospectus says:

"It is a mistake to imagine that Sisal is a small farmer's crop, at least in the ordinary proper American acceptance of the term, as the length of time which must elapse between planting and gathering necessarily precludes its being so, especially when, in addition to this, the cost of necessary mill and baling press, and the labor of gathering and milling and expense of cartage to mill are taken into consideration. As only some 4 to 5 per cent of the weight of leaves is returned in fiber, the expense for cartage of the leaves to the mill or factory is a heavy item even with the portable mills we intend using, and necessarily involves considerable expenditure in cars and stock or in estate tramways. Only under the metayer system of cultivation, under which the cultivator would have a half-interest in the proceeds of the crop, the over-lord, providing land and house and implements, and fertilizer, if any be necessary, and young plants for planting, and making the actual cultivators certain advances for living expenses against the growing crop, (which advances would be repaid out of the share of the crop accruing to them), the crop being gathered by the cultivators and milled at the joint cost of the over-lord and the cultivators, and the fiber disposed of by the former to the best advantage of their joint account, could it be considered in any way a cultivation for small proprietors. Such an arrangement as this, with proper precautions, should, however, be found both safe and practicable, and advantageous to both cultivators and over-lord.

"The advances which should be made the cultivators under this system should be something like as follows:

"1. On planting so many plants to the acre supplied by the over-lord or patron company (1000 or 1200 as may be) as at first planting, $7.50 per acre.

"2. On completion of each clearing and weeding of the land, (there should be one every four months), say, $1.25 per acre.

"3. On delivery of crop at mill in bundles of 50 properly sorted according to length, say, $16 per acre.

"4. On planting the young plants at side of the old ones, providing for continuance of the plantation; the same as at first planting, $7.50 per acre.

"The milling and baling and subsequent handling, including shipping, would be at joint account of both parties, at actual cost, a fair percentage only being charged as interest (or rent) for use of the milling and baling machines, or, perhaps better still, the over-lord or patron company might provide the mill and the facilities for baling, and the cultivators do the actual work. The gross returns obtained for the fiber, less freight and all other expenses in disposing of the crop, would be divided equally between the over-lord or patron company, and the cultivator, there being first deducted from the share accruing to the latter all advances that have been made him on account of his share, with any interest at bank rate added.

"Or, if this is considered too liberal, though here it is and let it be pointed out that a policy of 'live and let live' will pay all parties best in the end,—the over-lord or patron company might take delivery of the leaves at the cultivator's land, the milling and baling and other disposition of the crop afterwards being entirely his, or its, own business."

Dealing with other fiber products than sisal the prospectus says we can grow jute here to a certainty in any quantity and there will be a ready market here for all that can be raised for the manufacture of gunny sacks for the export of sugar. Hemp is a product which it is believed will do exceedingly well in the islands and be found extremely profitable. Abutilon fiber, manioc tobacco and pineapples are also products that can be grown with profit.

The promoters propose to float a company capitalized at $250,000, divided into 25,000 shares of $10 each. The assessments will be called 25 per cent on subscription, 25 per cent October 1, 1933, 25 per cent March 1, 1934, 25 per cent June 1, 1934.

JOHANNESBURG BARMAIDS.

The abolition of the barmaid as a Transvaal institution, says a correspondent, will be a noteworthy change in some quarters. "She was one of the institutions of the place—not in Pretoria, where the whiskey and sodas were mixed exclusively by men, but in Johannesburg, where the barmaid was queen of the place. And what barmaids were! Duchesses every one of them, to judge by their fine raiment—better than which never left Regent street—and the blinding masses of jewelry that bedecked their dainty fingers or hung about their snowy throats. Behind their bars they presided like queens; out walking of evenings they received the homage of the men, who walked around in their mingling kits or sauntered in the frock coat and tall hat that bloomed in the gold reef city, though nowhere else. The barmaid was the most important person outside the 'Chains,' where the millionaires assembled daily to dabble in stocks and shares. She made the Briton feel that she loved his cause; but, after all, she was a modern Delilah and fell under suspicion. I had the honor of meeting Schutte, the Chief of Police, not long before the war broke out, and that functionary boasted to me that the barmaids were the eyes and ears of his department. He pretended that owing to the information so gained he has nipped in the bud half a score of upsets in the Republic, and added that but for the barmaids he could never have held up his end of the log."
